THE P R E F A C E

Here hath been a great and gradual Advance in this Concordance-Work. Some Centuries of years have passed, since something of this nature had its beginning. The Latine Concordance was the first, its antiquity is not easily determined, the name of the Author being not found in any of the Manuscripts. Senensis tells us, it was a Work in which many Fathers employed themselves. R. Isaac Nathan's Concordance was the next, who translated the former into Hebrew: many Additionals by him were made thereunto. Either out of these, or at least in imitation of them, sprang others in each of those learned Languages; the Work at length grew up to such exactness and perfection, that Henry Stephens (after many who travelled before him) terms his Maxima & Absolutissima Concordantia, the largest and most exact Concordance. In our own Language there hath been the like progress, Marbeck was the first, then Cotten, Bernard, Downham, and which far exceeded all, Newman. Some others also there are in other methods, since and before: as Wilson's Dictionary, Clark's Holy Oyl, Wickens, Bennet of Synonymous Terms, the Fort Royal by J. H. &c.

The Labours of so many in this Subject, ancient and modern, each endeavouring to make it the more full and exact, shew plainly that it is a Work (attaining some Perfection) of great use and benefit; and so it is in all the Respects following: for such a Work will

I. Bring us to great familiarity with Scripture-phrase, by which our Language becomes more savoury, and we are enabled to present our apples of gold in pictures of silver, when we Pray, Preach, or otherwise Discourse about Holy matters.

II. Be a great means and help to attain the true sense and meaning of a Scripture.

1. The comparing several Texts relating to the same Subject, one with the other, is like the setting up of many candles in a room, by which, though the place be large, you may see into every corner of it : so may we hereby see the genuine extent and compass of a scripture, and all that is in it, though it be, as the precepts of God are, exceeding broad, Psal. 119. 96. The comparing of spiritual words and things with what is spiritual, hath ever been accounted the surest way of getting solid understanding.

2. By reducing Texts to their Context. Sentences remembred apart, are many times misunderstood, the sound of the letter onely heeded. Some Scriptures hold forth a quite other thing (if the Context be attended, and what goeth before and followeth after) then the semblance of the words themselves seem to represent; that Text 1 Cor. 2. 9. is commonly understood of the state of Glory, but it will appear from the Context there, and in Isa. 64. 4. the state of Grace is meant; there are many the like mistakes that may hereby be rectified.

3. The various things signified by the same word, and the variety of words signifying the same thing, begets difficulty. In a Concordance you have words and things so clearly distinguished, that not onely Scriptures obscure come hereby to be explained, but such as seem opposite are easily reconciled.

III. For invention and enlargement in meditation upon any subject contained in the Word, it is an unspeakable help. Logick affords us certain Topicks or seats of arguments; as Definitions, Divisions, Causes, Effects, Subjects, Adjuncts, Parities, Opposites, and the like, which afford us matter of great variety for the enlargement upon, and through-search into any truth. These Topicks being the utensils we ordinarily work with upon any subject, are always ready in our memories; in the use of a Concordance we have in gross all the materials pertinent to our subject in a readiness also before us, and want nothing but their reduction into method. And how much easier a work is it now to reduce pertinent Scriptures to their proper heads; then having these heads onely, to fill them up from all parts of the Bible with suitable Scriptures by our memory?

IV. And as the profit is much for enlargement, so it is also no less for a just limiting of our thoughts and invention. It is a felicity to be able to speak as much, so also to say no more on a subject, or enlarge further then the Scriptures freely lead; whereas for want or neglect of the rules of Logick, or the use of a Concordance, or both, we run out (many times nauseously) into more particulars then we have either a distinct Scripture, or Logical head different, to warrant; as when we hear 20, 30 Reasons, as many many Signs, Motives, Means, &c. given in relation to some one point; and this minds us of a further benefit, namely,

V. By the several proportions, greater or less, in respect of words and sentences that we find in use of a Concordance, having there before us all that is in Scripture of each subject collected together, we are much enabled to make a judgement what the mind of God is, and what truths or duties, in respect to our faith and obedience, he would have us most frequently and with greatest enlargement to insist upon, in our private meditations, or when we instruct others.

VI. How irksome a thing and burdensome is it, to find in our memories (as in old records) faded characters, and but here and there a word of what would be of use, and pertinent to our present occasion, could we by any means recover a perfect copy. Now in the use of a Concordance we have present ease under such labour and anxiety; by a word or two found in those ruins and broken parcels of a Scripture, we are able speedily to introduce the whole and entire sentence.

VII. A representation we have of those most blessed and usefull harmonies in Scripture, such as these; the Old Testament with the New, the Types with what is typified, Prophecies and where fulfilled, Promises made in one place, and their performance in another, as also Threatning and execution accordingly, Prayers put up in one age, and their answers in another. Such observations very much confirm our Faith, not onely in the verity and righteousness, but goodness and graciousness of our God.

VIII. To conclude in the last place, those that want, or are absent from their other books, a desirable supply may be made by a Concordance. The greatest helps afforded us in the meditation of any sacred subject is either from Treatises or Comments, the one furnisheth us with Scriptures suitable to our subject, and the other with interpretations and a right understanding of the Scriptures we would make use of. How much both ways your Concordance will contribute, may easily be collected from what hath been already said.

For this Concordance in particular, which is now published after so many, let it not be looked upon as needless; for in works but in tendency to Perfection we are capable of erring on one side onely, that is, in falling short, the oftner such a work (and such is this) shall be reassumed and come to hand, the greater will be its perfection.

THE PREFACE.

This Book as now published exceeds in Usefulness any that hath been heretofore set forth; as will appear in these following Particulars:

1. The Author having seen all that hath been of this kind before, even the latest; as Wicken, Bennet, &c. had his advantage to make this more full and compleat; and so it is, 1. In the Addition of many Texts of Scripture under the several Heads. 2. The Marginal Readings also are added, w^{ch} were never taken notice of by any in their Concordances before, which is a perfection nearest to what we attain from Concordances framed in the Original Language.

2. It is more expedite and ready for use; what we expect from a Concordance is with less Reading and Looking for met with, 1. By disposing of all Appellatives and Proper Names by themselves in distinct Alphabets. 2. The Classes containing Words of more frequent mention in the Scriptures, become very large and tedious to be read through, are subdivided by their Affixes at the head of each Class for the most part, and (if there be any great number) disposed in an Alphabetical order; As in Men, All, In, Like, Mighty, Of, Sons, &c. 3. The same or like Sentences, if set down according to the Order of the Bible, would be found sometimes in great distances one from another, are here brought together, and seen at the same view; as Acts 17.34. with Exod. 3.7. and Heb. 7.2. with Gen. 14.20. With Isa. 17.2. you have also Ezek. 34.28. Mic. 4.4. and Zeph. 3.13. This is of much advantage to those that desire to consult Commentaries upon a Text, because we may be better furnished upon some Books of the Scripture than upon all.

As this Book containeth more, so is the Volume less than formerly, it being 1. printed in a more small and close Letter, and 2. of a Method as Newmans, the Scriptures transcribed in full Sentences; yet also in Part as Wickens and Bennets, the Figures only of Chapter and Verse set down, which hath Abbreviated the Work by thousands of Lines, yet fully as compleat and usefull. This account I have given of the Volume, lest beholding it so much less than the former we should thereby suspect it not to contain so much, whereas it will be found to contain much more than any.

† is for a Marginal Reading.
|| where two Sentences are in one Line, this is to distinguish them.
